ABOUT THE FORUM

The International Forum on Women's Political Empowerment took place on 7 September 2017 in Budapest, Hungary. It aimed to raise awareness and facilitate dialogue on women's participation in political and public life in Hungary and beyond. The forum gathered around 200 participants (165 women and 35 men), including politicians, civil servants, gender equality advocates, representatives of civil society, academia and youth organizations, as well as students. Thirty Hungarian and international experts (23 women and 7 men) shared their knowledge on the topic, including guest speakers from Austria, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Ireland, Norway, and Portugal.

OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR), the Hungarian Women's Lobby, and the Embassy of Finland in Budapest organized the forum, in collaboration with the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung, Corvinus University of Budapest, and the Embassy of Estonia in Vienna. The forum was also supported by the Royal Norwegian Embassy in Budapest and the Council of Europe.

The forum served as a platform to exchange good practices for advancing women's political participation. It explored persisting and emerging challenges as well as opportunities and good practices for political parties, civil society and youth to strengthen gender equality, women's rights and women's access to decision-making.

BACKGROUND

Equal participation of women and men in political life is an internationally recognized human right, an indicator of the quality of democracy, and it is instrumental for economic development.

There is a strong international normative framework to promote women's equal participation and representation in politics. The UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) – to which Hungary is also party – lays down the state obligation to “take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in the political and public life” (Art. 7) and encourages them to introduce temporary special measures – like quotas – to achieve de facto gender equality (Art. 4).

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS HAVE A KEY ROLE TO PLAY IN PROMOTING WOMEN'S POLITICAL PARTICIPATION, AS THEY TRADITIONALLY DO TO PROMOTE AND PROTECT WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

The 57 OSCE participating States, including Hungary, have recognized the “under-representation of women in the OSCE area in decision-making structures” and have committed to “consider possible legislative measures, which would facilitate a more balanced participation of women and men in political and public life...” (OSCE Ministerial Council Decision 7/09 on Women's Participation in Political and Public Life). States have also committed to “encourage all political actors to promote equal participation of women and men in political parties, with a view to achieving better gender-balanced representation in elected public offices at all levels of decision-making.”

Despite international commitments, political participation and representation of women in Hungarian politics has been constantly low since the democratic transition. Women's representation in the Parliament of Hungary currently stands at 10.1%, with no improvement over the last 25 years. Hungary has the lowest representation of women in parliaments among all the OSCE participating States. Currently there are no women in the cabinet and the proportion of women among the state secretaries stands at 13%. No effective legislative and policy measures have been introduced to increase women's participation in political and public life in Hungary.

Political parties in Hungary, as in many OSCE participating States, still need to recognize their role and responsibility in promoting women as candidates for elections and public office as well as in addressing gender equality and women's issues in their party programmes and electoral platforms.

Women's organizations have a key role to play in promoting women's political participation, as they traditionally do to promote and protect women's rights. Women's organizations need to explore various strategies for effectively advocating for women's rights, which is particularly challenging in countries where the space for the women's movement is shrinking as a result of restrictive measures targeting civil society actors.

New and different forms of political activism, for example online platforms and social media, are increasingly being used by youth and could serve as a good impetus for more inclusive and diverse politics in Hungary and beyond.

The International Forum built upon ODIHR's previous efforts in advancing women's political participation in Hungary. ODIHR has successfully co-operated with Hungarian Women's Lobby (HWL) in the past, for example by co-organizing a seminar in 2014, entitled Women's participation in politics – Hungarian and international panorama after the 2014 parliamentary elections and ahead of the local elections. In 2013, ODIHR co-organized the event Women's Participation Ahead of Hungary's 2014 Parliamentary Elections, in co-operation with the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung and Central European University's School of Public Policy.

2018 will be the year for the next national elections in Hungary. In light of this, the international forum was initiated by HWL and garnered support of ODIHR and other co-organizers, with the overall objective to provide a platform for discussion among different stakeholders in Hungary and facilitate an exchange of good practices for political parties, civil society and youth to strengthen gender equality, women's rights and women's political participation in Hungary and beyond.

SUMMARY OF DISCUSSIONS

OPENING REMARKS

Opening remarks were delivered by the representatives of the main co-organizers of the Forum, including Corvinus University, the Embassy of Finland in Budapest, the Hungarian Women's Lobby and ODIHR.

In addition to welcoming the participants, the speakers highlighted the importance of women's political participation, focusing on the representative nature of democracy, the need to utilize the talents and contribution of all citizens (men and women) in decision-making and various spheres of life, and the economic and security benefits of gender equality and women's participation, as observed in Finland.

Speakers also referred to challenges to women's political rights, including extended politicizing of gender equality and women's rights, the lack of political will and of comprehensive policies to promote those, continued low levels of women's political representation, as is the case in Hungary, and the shrinking space for the women's movement working to protect women's rights, for example in the form of restrictive legislation targeting civil society organizations, which ultimately harm the very cause of human rights, including women's rights.

The following main recommendations were considered during this session:

- ◆ Strengthen dialogue across sectors in order to find joint solutions furthering gender equality and women's political empowerment;
- ◆ Encourage all political actors, including political parties, to actively promote women as candidates for elected office, which is also to those institutions' benefit;
- ◆ Work to engage men as allies in advancing gender equality;
- ◆ Pay particular attention to promoting the participation of under-represented groups of women;
- ◆ Provide continued support to the women's movement, crucial to democracy and human rights.

HIGH-LEVEL PANEL

The high-level panel featured lively contributions from guest speakers from Hungary, Germany, Estonia, and Finland.

The speakers highlighted examples of concrete actions for accelerating progress towards women's full and equal political participation, including examples of voluntary political party measures for gender equality, as observed in Germany. Discussion further explored gender equality as a human right relevant to both women and men, and education as key to combating stereotypes, as observed in Finland. The importance of women's leadership and mentoring, as well as breaking stereotypes, was discussed as crucial for women's political empowerment in Hungary and other countries. The importance of role models of women in high-level public office was highlighted in examples from Estonia.

Speakers also referred to challenges to women's political participation, looking at violence against women in the home, community and online, women's lack of confidence and their limited access to political networks and parties, and unfavourable portrayal of women politicians by the media.

The following main recommendations were considered during this session:

- ◆ Consider special legal and policy measures to strengthen women's representation and influence in political and public life;

AMBASSADOR MARINA KALJURAND

- ◆ Work with political parties across the ideological spectrum to ensure gender parity in candidacy for elected office;
- ◆ Encourage and support women to run for public office, by strengthening their confidence, ensuring family support, and facilitating work-life balance;
- ◆ Combat all forms of gender-based stereotypes, through work on education and media, emphasizing that gender equality is for the benefit of all;
- ◆ Strengthen coalitions for women's political empowerment, including networks of women leaders, the women's movement, and male allies.

“ The 'ideal' - political, cultural or social - conditions for more equal representation of men and women in politics will never emerge spontaneously. Fostering equal representation and ensuring that more women take up political posts is the only way such conditions will come about. ”

Chair of the Hungarian
Women's Lobby

“ Women possess half of the world's intelligence, its creativity and its leadership abilities. If we do not benefit from these abilities, our societies realize only half of their potential. Men should support women in taking an active role in the society. ”

SESSION 1 » WHAT IS THE ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTIES IN GETTING WOMEN INTO POLITICS?

This session discussed the role of political parties in advancing women's political participation and the integration of gender aspects into internal political party decision-making processes, convening an ODIHR expert on political parties and all Hungarian parties that have parliamentary fractions: the Fidesz – Hungarian Civic Alliance (Fidesz), the Hungarian Socialist Party (MSZP), the Movement for a Better Hungary (Jobbik), Politics Can Be Different (LMP), and the Christian Democratic People's Party (KDNP).

of (women) politicians were mentioned as factors discouraging and hindering women from successfully running for public office.

The following main recommendations were considered during this session:

- ◆ Work with all political actors to change the male-dominated landscape of politics, which should be friendlier to aspiring women candidates;
- ◆ Engage in a constructive dialogue with political parties across the ideological spectrum, providing them with recommendations on making their internal processes, procedures and activities gender-sensitive and women-friendly, as well as introducing targeted policies for that purpose, based on international good practices;
- ◆ Encourage political parties to adopt voluntary party measures that would facilitate women's access to their structures and elected office more broadly;
- ◆ Consider establishing cross-party alliances of women politicians, promoting women's leadership and empowerment;
- ◆ Continue advocacy encouraging state institutions and parliaments to be sensitive to gender equality issues;
- ◆ Support women wishing to enter political parties, by serving as their mentors, partners and funders.

“As guardians of democracy, political parties have a responsibility to promote women into politics.”

Doris PACK
President of the EPP Women
(European People's Party)

The speakers highlighted that political parties are the gatekeepers of democracy and often the main entry points to politics. Speakers also emphasized the strong talents and important contributions women make in politics and various fields of life, while recognizing that not every woman may be interested to be in political or public life.

A number of challenges were highlighted for women to enter politics, particularly in terms of accessing political parties. It was mentioned that politics remains a male-dominated field, filled with stereotypes preventing women from entering and participating. The internal processes of political parties, including candidate selection and allocation of party resources, remain in most cases non-transparent and favourable to incumbents, the majority of whom are men. Issues of party culture, harsh rhetoric in politics, and public harassment

SESSION 2 » HOW CAN THE WOMEN'S MOVEMENT SUPPORT WOMEN'S POLITICAL EMPOWERMENT?

This session discussed the relevance and important contribution of the women's movement to advancing women's political participation, as presented by an ODIHR expert on gender equality and representatives of civil society and academia from Finland, Hungary, and Ireland.

The speakers explored different approaches introduced by the women's movement across the OSCE region, for example: publicly encouraging women to enter politics; fundraising and crowdfunding in order to financially support training or candidacy of women candidates, as presented in the example of Ireland; raising awareness among the electorate about the importance of having women contribute to decision-making; working to combat gender-based stereotypes about women's political capacities; and promoting dialogue and collaboration among political stakeholders, as presented in the example from Finland.

A number of challenges were highlighted regarding the work of the women's movement, particularly in terms of the shrinking space for women's organizations in Central and Eastern Europe, difficulties in building coalitions among women's organizations or women leaders from different sectors or different political ideologies, and traditional social roles assigned to women and men impacting their current involvement in politics.

The following main recommendations were considered during this session:

- ◆ Work on building coalitions among women's organizations and women leaders across sectors and political lines, by clearly defining the organizational and leadership rules format of the coalition;
- ◆ Advocate for the introduction and implementation of comprehensive, evidence-based, and inclusive gender equality policies, as a manifestation of good governance;
- ◆ Engage in issue-based advocacy, which would create trust and solidarity among the women's movement and women leaders across sectors and political lines;
- ◆ Consider creative forms of fundraising, for example crowdfunding, to provide financial support and training for women political candidates;
- ◆ Remember that women are not a homogenous group and ensure that all groups of women, particularly those from under-represented groups can feel represented in your women's organization;
- ◆ Utilize social media as well as traditional socialization strategies to encourage women and men to actively participate in politics.

SESSION 3 » HOW CAN WE ENGAGE YOUTH FOR GENDER EQUALITY IN POLITICS?

This session discussed the role of youth as agents of change for gender equality. It highlighted that youth today have more opportunities than previous generations to influence politics due to better access to information, new technologies and education, as described by representatives of academia, youth and student organizations from Hungary and Portugal.

The under-representation – or even non-representation – of young women in the leadership of youth organizations and in student unions/ organizations was referred to as visible evidence for the latter.

The following main recommendations were considered during this session:

- ◆ Encourage youth to be politically active as agents of social change, advancing gender equality and women's rights, by providing a safe space for open dialogue and debate;
- ◆ Ensure that education triggers the notion of equality, free thinking and provides leadership opportunities for women and men, boys and girls alike, and consider partnerships with (higher) education institutions for that purpose;
- ◆ Introduce effective institutional reforms in case of students' unions for the advancement of gender equality and equal participation of all;
- ◆ Encourage political actors to formalize opportunities for the engagement of youth in political processes;
- ◆ Work on combating gender-based stereotypes among youth, by engaging in dialogue and peer-exchange, and in mentoring;
- ◆ Strengthen the confidence of young women in particular to engage politically, through training programmes and mentoring.

“Participation has received less consideration, including from international organizations and donors, than other socio-economic challenges faced by Roma and Sinti communities in recent years. Effective participation is essential for the success of policies addressing the needs and interests of these communities, as it enhances ownership with regard to such policies.”

Implementation
Meeting
#HDIM2017

11 - 22 September 2017, Warsaw
Ensuring equal enjoyment of rights and equal participation in political and public life

The speakers highlighted the importance of engaging youth in decision-making, whether in elected office, student unions or civil society, focusing on the importance of strengthening access of youth to decision-making bodies, engaging youth in peer-exchanges, and building skills and confidence of young women especially to engage in policy debate in their schools and community, as presented in the example from Portugal.

A number of challenges were highlighted in terms of youth engagement, particularly those related to limited access of youth to formal politics, discrimination experienced by youth from marginalized groups, and in this context multiplied discrimination against women as presented by a Roma activist, and gender-based stereotypes among youth and youth organizations themselves.

CLOSING REMARKS

Closing remarks were delivered by gender equality experts, diplomats, and academics from Hungary, Norway and the Council of Europe.

The speakers highlighted the importance of gender equality and women's political participation, not only as a women's right, but as crucial to democracy, economic development, stability and prosperity. The Norwegian example also showed that women's empowerment and political participation have not weakened political institutions, nor reduced the quality of political decision-making, but rather quite the contrary. International and regional human rights standards and commitments were also called upon, encouraging governments to strengthen their efforts in implementing their gender equality commitments, in Hungary and beyond. It was also highlighted that high politics – represented by political parties – and low politics – namely the politics in the broader society – should not be separated and should work together to represent the interests of all citizens, women and men.

A number of challenges were also emphasized, including continued gender-based discrimination and women's under-representation in politics, the persistent gender pay-gap, economic inequality and the significantly weaker economic power of women compared to men, as well as the imbalance in family care responsibilities of women and men.

The following main recommendations were considered during this session:

- ◆ Encourage all political actors to consider legal and voluntary measures which would promote gender equality and women's representation and influence in politics;
- ◆ Introduce robust laws and policies, which would guarantee women's human rights and financial independence, as well as professional and family life balance, thus paving the path to women's active participation in various spheres of life, as desired;
- ◆ Ensure that women's needs, interests and priorities are clearly articulated and represented, form part and parcel of all laws and policies and are incorporated into the operation of representative institutions;
- ◆ Strengthen networks and coalitions of women across sectors and political ideologies;
- ◆ Support the women's movement, as the continued voice of women and protector of human rights of all.
